

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INDEX.

PREFACE.

THIS Volume is the first of a short series which it is intended shall contain copies of all the records now remaining in the Chapter House, Westminster, the Treasury of the Court of Exchequer, of the FINES which were levied of lands, or any other possessions, in the reigns of the two brothers, Richard and John.

The account which Mr. Cruise has given Origin of Fines. of the nature and the origin of the legal process which is meant by the phrase "levying a Fine" or "passing by Fine" is so perspicuous, and it approves itself at once as so exceedingly just, that I shall take the liberty to quote the passage from his work as preparatory to some other observations, which it seems highly proper to prefix to this publication, on the form of records of this description, the state of their preservation, the uses which may be made of the information which they contain, and on the editorial principles on which the publication of them has here been conducted.

" When property first became the subject
" of alienation, it was found necessary to adopt

“ some authentic mode of transfer, which might “ secure the possession and evince the title of “ the purchaser.

“ By the antient common law a charter
“ of feoffment was in general the only written “ instrument whereby lands were transferred “ or conveyed. But although this assurance “ derived great authenticity from the number “ of witnesses by whom it was usually attested “ and from the solemn and public manner in “ which livery of seisin was formerly given,
“ yet still it may be supposed that inconveni“ niences would frequently arise, either from
“ the loss of the charter itself, or from the diffi“ culty of proving it after a lapse of years.

“ These circumstances probably induced “ men to look out for some other species of “ assurance which should be more solemn,
“ more lasting, and more easy to be proved
“ than a charter of feoffment.

“ Experience must soon have discovered
“ that no title could be so secure and noto“ rious as that which had been questioned by “ an adverse party, and ratified by the deter“ mination of a court of justice; and the inge“ nuity of mankind soon found out the method
“ of drawing the same advantages from a “ fictitious process.

“ To effect this purpose the following
“ plan was adopted; a suit was commenced

“ concerning the lands intended to be conveyed,
 “ and when the writ was sued out and the par“ ties appeared in court, a composition of the “ suit was entered into with the consent of “ the judges, whereby the lands in question
 “ were acknowledged to be the right of one “ of the contending parties.

“ This agreement, being reduced into “ writing, was enrolled among the records of “ the court, where it was preserved by the “ public officer, by which means it was not so “ liable to be lost or defaced as a charter of “ feoffment, and would at all times prove itself;
 “ and being substituted in place of the sentence
 “ which would have been given in case the suit
 “ had not been compounded, it was to be held “ of equal force with the judgment of a court of “ justice.”¹

The same sensible and learned writer has shown the several steps of the process, from the original suing out the writ or præcipe till the whole transaction is completed, and the chirographer has engrossed a perpetual memorial of it. This has been done likewise by Blackstone, and by so many other law writers, whether on the Laws of England in general or on Fines only, that it is unnecessary to enter upon it here. Neither, indeed, is it requisite for the understanding the nature of this publication, or for the use of it by historical or other enquirers.

Name of the document.

The technical name of the memorials which are made of these transactions is Pedes Finium, the Feet of the Fines. Under this term they are often referred to by the charter antiquaries of the seventeenth century. The origin and occasion of a term which does not carry with it any strong evidence of its own propriety seem to be lost in the darkness of that remote period in which it was first used.

The records are, however, now more usually called Fines, which becomes in official pronunciation and in ordinary discourse the English monosyllable Fines; and out of this has been formed, by a process perhaps peculiar to this word, the singular Fine. Why a record of this description should have acquired the name of Finis or Fine is easily explained. The very nature of the document is, that it relates the end or the finishing of litigation, real or feigned. The first clause in the document is, "Hæc est finalis concordia," &c., and towards the close we have the words, "Et pro hoc fine et concordia," &c.

The word Fine or Fines has thus two senses, the legal and the diplomatic. It denotes either the whole transaction, by which lands are conveyed from one party to another in this particular manner, or the written document, testifying that such transaction had taken place, laid up among the other records of the realm.

The superior advantages which attend the conveyance of lands by fine above the conveyance by deed of feoffment has allured innumerable persons in all past generations to avail themselves of it, from the time when first the courts allowed themselves to be made the theatres of fictitious contests, and to enter on solemn record decisions of differences which had no real existence.

Extensive
practice.

When the Courts first condescended to allow themselves to be thus called in to determine controversies that were merely feigned, is a question of legal antiquarianism, which is considered by many as still undetermined. The great current of authority undoubtedly runs in favour of the opinion that the practice arises out of the usages of our remote ancestors. Blackstone was of this opinion; and he states the opinion itself, and the grounds of it, in these few words:—"Fines are of equal antiquity with " the first rudiments of the law itself; are " spoken of by Glanville and Bracton in the " reigns of Henry II. and Henry III. as things
" then well known and long established; and " instances have been produced of them even
" before the Norman invasion."¹

Antiquity of Fines.

Blackstone's opinion.

It will be seen that Blackstone's opinion is,
(1.) That the practice of passing lands by Fine was known to the English law at a period, left by him indeed undetermined, but lying far back in the times of the first Norman Kings or even of the Saxon sovereignty in England ; and, (2.) That the practice is not come to us from the refinements of the Roman law, but from the ruder jurisprudence of the less cultivated nations of Europe.

Cruise's opinion,
and the grounds
of it.

On both these points the opinion of Mr. Cruise is at variance with his.

“ The idea of a Fine appears to have been “ originally taken from the Transactio of the “ civilians, which was an accommodation of a “ suit already commenced, or an agreement “ respecting some doubtful matter that would “ otherwise become the subject of a suit.
“ Transactio est super re dubia, aut lite incerta,
“ conventio non gratuita, aliquo dato, retento vel
“ promisso.

“ Although no modern writer on the Eng“ lish law has taken notice of this circumstance,
“ yet the definition of a Fine given by Bracton “ seems to be an undoubted proof of it : —
“ Concordia in foro seculari idem est quod “ Transactio. Et est Transactio, de re dubia et “ lite incerta, aliquo dato vel promisso vel retento,
“ a lite transactio. [sic] Bracton, fol. 310. a. & b.

“ From the similarity of these definitions it “ appears clearly that the English lawyer copied
“ from the Roman ; nor should it appear extra“ ordinary that we are indebted to the civil law
“ for this most useful species of assurance, when

“ we consider how much our first writers, “ Glanville and Bracton, have borrowed from “ Justinian’s code.”¹

“ No traces of a Transactio or Fine are to “ be found in the Original Customs of the “ Duchy of Normandy.”²

“ If the first idea of Fines was derived from “ the civil law, it will follow that Fines could “ not possibly have been known in England until “ some time after the year 1130, when a copy “ of the Pandects was found at Amalphi in “ Italy; in consequence of which discovery the “ study of the Roman law spread with un“ common rapidity over all Europe, not except“ ing this island, in which Roger, surnamed
 “ Vacarius, who was brought over by Theobald,
 “ a Norman abbot, (Selden ad Fletam, c.7, s. 3,) Evidence afforded by the offices of Record.
 “ elected to the see of Canterbury as early as
 “ the year 1147, read public lectures at Oxford
 “ on the Roman law.”³

The evidence which the English offices of record bear on this question is in favour of the later period. From the seventh year of the reign of King Richard I. only, is there any large collection of documents of this class, or any thing which can be called a consecutive Series of them. From that time to the present day the series may be said to be unbroken. Not but that some Fines which once no doubt existed cannot now be produced, and there are perhaps a few years, as the two last years of the reign of John, in which either no Fines were levied, or the record of them has wholly perished. But so many remain of the seventh of Richard I., and of almost every year from that time downward, that we may justly speak of possessing a series of documents of this class from the seventh of Richard I. to the present time. We are not, however, to infer that because the series commences only in the seventh of Richard I. that therefore the depositaries of documents of this class possess no evidence to the existence of the practice at an earlier period. Some of the Fines still existing contain references to Fines of an earlier year of the reign of Richard, as may be seen in the present Volume¹; and in one instance, at least, to a Fine of the Reign of Henry II.² But there is still more direct evidence. There are remaining in the proper custody five Fines of an earlier date, the genuineness of four of which is unquestionable; nor perhaps ought that of the fifth, with an erasure, to be doubted. These Fines will be given in the present Preface as completely as their state will allow; that this Work may contain all the Fines still remaining on record down to the period assigned to it, the close of the reign of King John. In one of them which belongs to the reign of King Richard, the word which expressed the particular year is nearly worn away; but enough remains to show that it was either the fourth or fifth year, and there are probable reasons for assigning it to the latter of those years. Two others are of the thirty-fifth of Henry II.; one is of the twenty-eighth of that reign; and the remaining fine is probably of the same year, though this cannot be asserted absolutely, owing to the injuries which the document has received. These few documents prove, in the manner which is above all others satisfactory, that the practice of passing lands by Fine, the memorial of the transaction being preserved among the records of the realm, existed as early as the twenty-eighth year of King Henry II. They prove no more. But they show also a truth, which too frequently presents itself in the course of researches such as these, that we have lost the benefit of much evidence of this kind which our prudent ancestors had prepared for us, and intended to send down to their posterity an ever-enduring memorial of some of the most important of their transactions.

Next to the evidence which the actual record in its proper custody presents, may be placed the evidence to this point which is presented by the old Repertories or Calendars preserved in the office which has the custody of these documents. The evidence which these present does indeed go to show that there were Fines in the earlier years of Richard not now known to exist: but they contain no notice of any Fines of the reign of Henry II., except the few which have been already mentioned. And next to this is the evidence of Transcripts which are come down in chartularies, or in the collections of preceding antiquaries. This, however, opens a wide field of enquiry. We may assert, as the result of an examination which is really practicable, that there are not at present any Fines in the proper custody of a date earlier than the twenty-eighth of Henry II.; but to assert that there are no transcripts of Fines of an earlier date in chartularies, monastic, municipal, or private, is what no one can undertake to do, because no one can have access to all: nor can one say what the collections of all previous antiquaries may or may not contain. Thus much, however, may be said: the few monastic chartularies which I have consulted, with a view to this question, contain Fines of the early years of Richard and of the reign of Henry, but none before his twenty-eighth year, and yet the monasteries, above all, delighted to found their titles on this secure basis. Of all the Fines printed by Dugdale in the Monasticon, or added to his collection by the modern editors of that work, there are none which belong to a period earlier than that year. Dugdale's acquaintance with the contents of the monastic chartularies was, perhaps, superior to that which any other antiquary has been able to boast; and, had he found in any of them Fines of an earlier year than the year above-named, he would, probably, have made use of them in his Origines Juridicales, where he discourses on this subject, or when, in his Catalogue of Justices and Justiciars, he has frequent occasion to refer to this particular species of evidence.

Dugdale, in the work just quoted, has printed a Fine of the twenty-eighth of Henry II.¹: Madox prints one of the same year², and another of the thirty-first of that reign, in his time remaining in its proper custody, as a specimen of this species of record³: and Spelman one of the thirty-third year.⁴ So that these, the great collectors on such a subject as this, contain no evidence to any higher antiquity of Fines; for it seems very doubtful whether the two instruments spoken of by Dugdale at the fiftieth page of his Origines, one without a date and the other in the twenty-sixth of Henry II., were really Fines properly so called.

By the collections of Dugdale, Madox, and Spelman.

May I be permitted to extend this enquiry so as to include an examination of the grounds on which Blackstone has rested his opinion, that “Fines are of equal antiquity with the first rudiments of the law itself,” and that “instances have been produced of them even before the Norman invasion.” The authority quoted in the margin is “Plowden, 369;” and it will, I believe, be found, that wherever the same thing is asserted, the reference is mediately or immediately to the case there reported at great length by Plowden, Stowel versus Lord Zouch, in the Exchequer. The part of the report to which reference is more particularly made, is that in which Plowden observes, that Catlyn.

Sir Robert Catlyn, a learned lawyer, and Chief Justice of England in the beginning of Elizabeth's reign, affirming the antiquity of Fines after Glanville and Bracton, "cited many Fines of

" antiquity; viz., some before the Conquest
" touching the possessions of the abbey of Crow-
" land, and divers since the Conquest, proving
" the continuance of Fines down from the Con" quest until the time of Edward I., in whose
" reign statutes were made concerning Fines."
It may be questioned whether the early part of the reign of Elizabeth were a period when, even in the sages of the law, there was much of the spirit of nice enquiry into the genuineness of documents, or of profound investigation into the origin and antiquity of the processes which passed before them. " May one," says Madox, with even more of that modesty by which his writings are so peculiarly distinguished, and which here seems to have degenerated into an unworthy timidity, " without offence, doubt of " his exactness in this particular. However, in " this case I affirm nothing. Without prejudice
" then to any man's opinion upon that point,
" and with an extreme deference to the memory
" of that learned Chief Justice, I shall at present
" content myself to go no further back for the " original of Fines than to the Norman conquest,
" and soon after that time we meet with Fines
" properly so called."¹ It is evident that the

¹ Dissertation prefixed to the Formulare Anglicanum, p. xiii. Madox, however, has nowhere shown the evidence of the existence of Fines before the reign of Henry II.; if by the word " soon " he meant to indicate an earlier period.

Judge founded his opinion on charters of the abbey of Croyland, which was of Saxon foundation. Now there are two circumstances unfavourable to this evidence: 1. The scepticism of modern historical research has not spared to question boldly the genuineness of the Saxon charters which in later times were propounded by the monks of that house as the basis of their title to several of their possessions¹; and, 2. Many, perhaps all which were known in the time of Sir Robert Catlyn, of those charters, are come down to our times in connexion with the history of Ingulphus, with many other charters of the house for the first two centuries after the Conquest; and among the Saxon charters, there is nothing which bears the semblance of a Fine, and of those after the Conquest, the earliest Fine is of the seventh year of King John. No Fines of an earlier date are printed by Mr. Gough in his History of the Abbey of Croyland, or in the account given of the abbey in the Monasticon, nor are any earlier Fines to be

¹ Wanley, writing to the Earl of Oxford, says of Ingulphus: "Many charters recited in that work are vehemently suspected to be forgeries." Harl. MS. 7,526. And Hickes, in his Dissertatio Epistolaris (Thesaurus, vol. iii. p. 67.), writes as follows:—"Hoc imprimis spectandum est in chartis quæ pro originalibus aut originalium transcriptis venditantur, quales sunt in Historia Croilandensi Regum Saxoniorum omnes. E quibus universæ, aut tantum non universæ, ex eo fictæ esse noscuntur, quod voces et phrases Gallo-Normanicas contineant multas, quæ ante adventum Normannorum, aut saltem in temporibus, quibus confectæ esse finguntur, adeo in usu non erant apud Anglo-Saxones, ut Anglia, aut eas, aut earum usum jam tum penitus ignoraret, &c."

Testimony of two early law-writers.

Bracton.

Glanville.

His expression uncertain in respect of the duration of the practice.

Blackstone, following still the leading of the reverend Judge whose opinion was reported by Plowden, cites Glanville and Bracton as speaking “ in the reigns of Henry II. and Henry III. of “ Fines as things then well known and long “ established.” The evidence of Bracton is in this point unimportant, as no one contends for a higher antiquity for his work than the reign of Henry III. But the case is different with respect to Glanville, who wrote according to an opinion which seems hardly ever to have been called in question in the reign of Henry II. That this writer speaks of Fines as things then “ well-known ” is certain : that he speaks of them as “ long established ” is also probable, though the extent of the continuance is not very clearly to be inferred. The words referred to are, it is presumed, these : — “ But it often “ happens that pleas moved in the King’s Court “ are determined by an amicable composition “ and final concord, but with the consent and “ license of the King or his Justices, whatever “ the plea may concern, whether land or any “ other thing. Such a concord is with the “ general consent of the persons interested, “ usually reduced into a writing common to all “ the parties, which is recited before the King’s “ Justices in the Common Pleas, in whose pre-

“ sence each person’s part of the writing, agreeing in all things with the others, is delivered to the party.”¹ It is difficult to determine what general expressions such as these require in point of continuance ; but it is most important to observe, that if the treatise in which they are found were written in the reign of King Henry II., it must have been at the very close of his reign, unless the copies are come down to us interpolated. For when the writer proceeds to enlarge upon the subject of Fines, and introduces specimens of this species of document, the specimens are, 1. One which was levied before Ranulph de Glanville at Westminster, on the Vigil of Saint Peter, in the thirty-third of Henry II. ; and, 2. One which was levied, first in a court of Geoffrey Fitz Peter, and afterwards before the King’s Justices, the Bishops of Ely and Norwich and Ranulph de Glanville, on the Tuesday after the feast of Saint Simon and Jude in the same thirty-third of Henry II. The dates of these two documents are the best, and the only decisive notes of time which the treatise contains ; and as Henry II. died in the midst of his thirty-fifth year, there is but a short remaining period of the reign to which the composition of this celebrated treatise can be referred. I own, that looking at this fact in connection with the circumstances of the life of Ranulph de Glanville, the Chief Justiciary of King Henry II., a strong suspicion arises that this treatise is not the work of Ranulph de Glanville, and need not therefore be assigned to a period when he was still alive. We may take as proved by the dates of the Fines transcribed by the author, that it was composed after the feast day of Saint Simon and Jude, in the thirty-third of Henry II., which, in other words, is after the twenty-eighth day of October, A.D. 1187. The minds of the Christians of Western Europe were, in the winter of that year, much distracted by the intelligence of the successes of Saladin. It was determined that England should join in a crusade, at a Council held at Geddington on the eleventh of February 1188. Ranulph de Glanville partook of the enthusiasm of the time, and signed himself for the crusade. He went to Palestine; and was slain before Acon in 1190. He continued also in his office of Chief Justiciar to the close of the reign of Henry II., who died on the 6th of July 1189. If these facts and dates are sufficient to render it probable that the treatise called Glanville is not necessarily to be referred to Ranulph de Glanville as its author, and that therefore, instead of being referred to the year 1189, or thereabout, it may be transferred to the reign of John, a material difficulty will be removed out of the way of those who think that the custom of passing lands by Fine did not prevail at a period much earlier than that from which Fines are actually come down to us in the proper custody: and, if it must be given to a Glanville as its author¹, there was another

The treatise called Glanville not written till the very end of the reign of Henry II. ;

William de
Glanville, another eminent lawyer of those times, but later than Ranulph.

* The title of the work in the Manuscript now in the Library of the Honourable the Society of Lincoln's Inn, pre-

Glanville, whose name was William, who sat in the Curia Regis in the seventh and eighth of Richard I., who, for any thing that appears in the treatise itself, may have been its author as well as his more illustrious namesake.

The custody of the Fines seems to have been committed in the early ages to the officers of the Court of Exchequer, whose records, after having been preserved probably in some apartments of the antient palace of Westminster, have long found a resting place in the octagonal building which was the Chapter House of the conventual church of Westminster. In the year 1807 a general inventory of the contents of this repository was framed by order of the Commissioners on the Public Records, a transcript of which, on vellum, was placed by their order in the library of the British Museum. The number of the manuscript is "Additional, 8,977," where, at fol. 25, 26, and 27, is an account of the presses in which the Fines were deposited. These presses were in the inner octagon of the gallery; and the Fines in them are represented as extending from the reign of Richard I. to the reign of James II. The few Fines of the reign of Henry II. were in the outer octagon on the same story.¹

But these are only a portion of the Fines then existing, the practice having been discontinued of transferring the Fines to this custody for some reason not now known. The Chirographers of the Court of Common Pleas had retained innumerable documents of this class in their own custody, especially since the reign of King Henry VII. The place in which they kept them was the Temple Church, where one of the chapels, which is described as a vault under the church, was appropriated to receive them. The attention of the Commissioners was directed to this portion of the Fines in the year 1809; and at the request of the Chirographers of the Common Pleas, the Fines at the Temple Church, to the end of the reign of George II., were all transferred to the Chapter House in the summer of that year.

In what state these valuable documents then were, and what a large accession was then made to the collection of Fines at the Chapter House, may be seen by the following entry in the Minute Book of the Commissioners:—" On Wednesday " the 28th June 1809, and the three following " days, Mr. Meaking of the Chirographer's " Office brought and delivered into the Record " Office at the Chapter House ten large cart " loads of the transcripts of Fines, each load " being about one ton weight, and the number " of bundles being above fourteen hundred, as " Mr. Meaking told me, [the Sub-Commissioner " employed to receive them.] Some of these " bundles were brought from under the Temple “ Church, where, from the dampness of the “ place, and a constant accumulation of filth and “ dirt, many of them are rendered almost useless,

 “ and many half destroyed through lying in the “ wet, whereby they are become so fixed toge“ ther as not to be separated without breaking “ them in pieces. The smell arising from the “ sad condition they were in rendered the ar“ rangement, &c. of them very disagreeable and “ unhealthy. The later bundles were kept at
 “ the Chirographer’s Office, and are in good pre“ servation, but many of them are not so well
 “ arranged as they might have been. The files “ of very many bundles had been, through the “ incaution of persons making searches, cut, “ whereby many thousand transcripts, during “ various reigns, years, and terms, were thrown “ into confused masses. Mr. Meaking at the “ same time delivered forty-six volumes of “ Indexes to the Fines, commencing from the “ time of Henry VIII., and continuing until the “ end of the reign of King George II. The Fines
 “ and Indexes of his present Majesty’s reign are “ remaining at the Chirographer’s Office.

“ Upon selecting and collecting the Fines
 “ of the several reigns, I found they extended
 “ far beyond the period to which the Indexes “ went, for they are as high as the reign of “ King Edward II.; the bundles in the reign of “ Edward III. are many, but the subsequent “ reigns have but few. There is no index or ac“ count whatever of these more ancient Records.”

Fines much exposed to loss and injury from the manner in which the record is made.

The manner in which the memorial of these transactions is made occasions them to be more exposed to injury and loss than are any of the other great classes of Public Records. They are neither entered in books nor on rolls, but the memorial of each transaction is entered apart on a small piece of parchment, resembling in many respects the Feoffment Deeds with which the Fines are correlative. The upper edge of each is cut in indentations through the word "Cirographum," written in a character unusually large. These are collected in files, one or more for each county and each reign. There are thus numerous small bundles, which is itself a plan unfavourable to secure preservation. A single Fine is also easily detached from the file to which it belongs when required for any purpose of curiosity or business. The bundles also thus present innumerable outer edges, a circumstance which in these affairs ought always to be avoided. Added to this, the string which passes through the centre of the Fines, by frequent attrition, has worn away in many instances some portion of the Record. So that, besides the loss of documents of this class, which there is great reason to believe has taken place, many of those which remain are more or less injured, some are half destroyed, some almost mouldered into dust, and the whole requiring that attention and care for their future conservation which the Record Board is now bestowing upon them. The Fines for the county of Cambridge, in the reign of John, for instance, it will be seen in the present Volume, have amongst them many which can be regarded in no other light than as mere fragments, and it was not without some hesitation that I committed such half-perished documents to the press.

In the present publication it is not intended to do more than to print the Fines for the two first reigns, Richard and John. Many of these are in a state of great decay, and there is little hope that, with all the care that may be bestowed upon them, they will render up their trust for the benefit of many coming generations. We have less evidence of other kinds for these reigns than for later. The Fines of these reigns are few, few indeed, when compared with that vast sea of documents of this description which the reign of King Henry III. presents, and all the subsequent reigns. If, hereafter, it should be deemed expedient to deliver into the hands of the student in our legal, gentilitial, and topographical antiquities, more of these useful documents, it must be, not by presenting, as in this publication, the whole document at length, but by extracting from each the choicest portion of the information it contains.

Proposed extent of the present publication.

The five Fines already spoken of, which precede the series, and have escaped when so many of their fellows must have perished, will not be thought out of place in this Preface.

Arrangement of the Fines
 in this work.

In the arrangement of the Fines in this work there is in the main a correspondency with the existing arrangement of the original documents, as they now lie in the office; that is, they are arranged in counties, and according to the years of each of the two reigns. So far it was easy, and the two distributions agree. The chrono-

Chronological

logical arrangement of the Fines in each year, according to the days on which they were levied, for they were not then, as in later times, levied only during the terms, is a more difficult and delicate task. Partial attempts at such an arrangement seem to have been made by persons who have had the custody of them; many of the Fines have numbers upon them, the work of modern hands; some present a double numbering; and, on the whole, it appears uncertain what was intended, and certainly little or no use can now be made of the office numerals. That I have succeeded in every instance in placing the Fines in the exactest order, I will not take upon myself to say; and in one instance, where the date was decayed, I perceive, on the review of my labours, that I have yielded too much to the arrangement of the office, even in respect of years. To this point I have, however, directed an attention perhaps greater than the advantage to be gained deserved; and I gladly seize the opportunity of acknowledging the great convenience I have found in the tables which are contained in a work on Chronology, by Sir Harris Nicolas, a most useful volume to all who are engaged in historical and antiquarian researches; and also how much I have been indebted to the Itinerarium Regis Johannis, a contribution, by Mr. Thomas Duffus Hardy of the Tower, to the twenty-second volume of the Archæologia.¹ A similar chronology of the subsequent reigns would be of great assistance to all the critical students in English affairs, and especially to all who have to pronounce on the genuineness of documents relating to England, or to ascertain with exactness the period of time to which a diploma belongs. After these acknowledgments, it is needless to add, that in distributing the Fines of the reign of John, the years of his reign have been regarded as being each from Ascension Day to Ascension Day.

Close adherence to the form of the original.

In common with most of the other publications issued by the Board, the copies of the Fines in this work are given in a form approaching to the fac-simile. The disadvantage of this plan is, that a work is, on a first view, repulsive, and is never read with the same facility and pleasure that it would be, were the contractions dilated, and the cyphers made to give way to the words plainly written, which it is well known to an editor that they represent. I have not, however, so strictly affected the letter, as not to yield something to the convenience of the reader. I have taken the liberty to mark the commencement of each of the four great divisions of the Fine, not only by a capital letter, where perhaps none existed in the original, but by a white space, to which the original has nothing corresponding. The convenience of this, whether in continued perusal or in occasional reference, will be found to be very great. The use of the capital letter in the original was evidently regulated by no fixed principles: I have retained it in the names of persons, places, and festivals, at the beginning of each of the great divisions of the Fine, and in a few other places where I found it in the original, and it appeared to facilitate the reading of the record, not to render that which was perhaps somewhat dark still more obscure. In respect of the punctuation, the scribes—admirable masters, as they appear to have been in most respects, of their art—seem to have proceeded without design and without system, and to have made the reading of their work more difficult, by a contrivance which was intended to produce an opposite effect. Their punctuation is introduced only in a few cases in which it appeared to be of real advantage. The punctuation.

It may be proper to add that in the minims, The minims. in most cases, the true reading is to be determined, not by the Fine itself, but by other information possessed by the transcriber, so that the name of William de Medmeham or William de Medineham, which occurs in the first page and elsewhere, may be read, as far as the evidence of the Fine itself goes, either way. The small t and the c are also formed in many instances by precisely the same trace of the style.

The degree of exactness with which the Fines are here exhibited may, however, be judged of by a comparison of that which is represented in the fac-simile engraving annexed, with the printed copy of it at p. 81 of the present volume. A reading of this Fine, with all the contracts dilated, and the cyphers explained, is added.

Enough and more than enough for any practical or useful purpose has now been done. As for the rest, they are either proper names which the reader who takes up this work will be at no loss to understand, or words which so plainly show their own full force and meaning, that no assistance with respect to them can be needed, which is, indeed, the case with not a few in the table which has been given. It may be observed, that the mode of writing the names of places with a Roman termination was not quite disused at the period to which these documents belong, and that the supplying such a termination is in some instances all that is meant when we find the final letter struck over, as in the names Strattoñ, Strattona ; Suttoñ, Suttona.

department of the information which the Fines afford, the greatest convenience will be found from the ready guidance of the eye to the several distinct portions of the Fine by the blanks by which they are kept apart. These portions are four, and each of them will be found to contain valuable information peculiar to itself.

First portion of the Fine.

I. The declaration of the Place at which the fine was levied; of the Time; and of the Persons who composed the court.

Place where

Curia Regis.

The Fines which are deposited among the public Records of the realm are, it is believed, all levied in the Curia Regis. This is certainly the case with the Fines of the earlier reigns. Fines levied in the county courts or in the courts of the great barons, of which early instances occur, were entered on record among the proceedings of those inferior courts.¹ The Curia Regis was moveable; it accompanied the King, or it existed in the provinces in the form of a court in which presided Justices Itinerant, who seem to have been in those early times, as now, commissioned to hold courts in various places by the King. We shall recur to the subject of the sittings of the King and his Justices hereafter, when we shall show in detail what is to be collected from this portion of the Fine concerning the administration of justice in the reigns of Richard and John ; but we may observe here that the series of Fines throws the strongest light on the great inconvenience which must have been felt through all orders of society by the perpetual shifting of the place in which the Curia Regis, strictly so called, was held, the King seldom being for a week together in any one certain place, and often in the same month at very remote points of his dominions, which must have occasioned not only great inconvenience to all suitors, but have opened a way to the collusive passing of Fines, notwithstanding the proclamations which were required to accompany them. No Fine is now to be found, passed of lands in England, in any Curia Regis in a foreign land, if the King when abroad held such Court ; that would have been an abuse of the institution too enormous. As it was, the inconvenience was felt to be so great that the remedy was provided by the Great Charter, the xxii. chapter of which runs thus :—“ Communia placita non sequantur curiam nostram, sed teneantur in aliquo loco certo. Recognitiones de nova dissaisina, de morte antecessoris, et de ultima presentatione, non capiuntur nisi in suis comitatibus, &c.”

ments of this class have a great advantage over the common feoffment deeds, the instruments correlative as to their subject with them. In the feoffment deeds we have rarely any date till we come to the reign of King Edward I., a century later than the time when the Fines first occur. The date of the transactions which they record is to be collected in the best manner we are able from the substance of the document, and especially from the names of the witnesses. A person skilled in these instruments, and who has the opportunity of consulting and comparing many relating to a particular county or district, can rarely err more than eight or ten years in assigning one of these deeds to the period to which it belongs; but that higher confidence which the contemporary date gives is in all cases much to be desired. The exact period is often of importance; and the precision with which the Fines are dated may be often found to establish points from which to reason to the period to which undated instruments relating to the same families or lands belong.

Names of the persons composing the Courts always given.

The names of the persons before whom the Fines were levied are in every Fine set forth at length. The number varies from four or five to ten or twelve persons. This part of the Fine shows who were the persons engaged in the public administration of justice, and it is, in fact, chiefly from these lists that Dugdale has compiled the tables of the Justices in his Origines, from which other catalogues of Justiciars and Justices have been formed.

Dugdale consulted the Fines only partially, and under the great disadvantages which attend the resort of a person whose object requires not a hasty inspection but a continuous examination, to the offices in which these documents were deposited. For the two reigns to which this work refers, and for the later years of the reign of King Henry II., I have availed myself of the opportunities which the preparation of this work has given me for endeavouring to form a more full and more exact table of the persons who sat in the Curia Regis, whether when stationary at Westminster, attending the King in his journies, or when he was represented by the Justices Itinerant. This table will be found in an Appendix to this Preface.

With such a multitude of documents of this class before us, there cannot be a doubt that we obtain through them a complete catalogue of the persons, whether prelates, earls, or eminent lawyers who sat at that period in the Curia Regis, and through whom the higher administration of public justice was conducted. I speak only of the period between the seventh of Richard I. and the sixteenth of John: before that time the Fines are few, and it is not improbable that every fresh Fine that may be discovered in any copy will add some other name to the list. The phrase which occurs in every Fine, "coram, &c. justiciariis et aliis baronibus et fidelibus domini Regis tunc ibi presentibus," is probably nothing more than words of form; but, concerning these words, it has been said that before the seventh of John the two terms baronibus and fidelibus are used indiscriminately, but that after the seventh of John the former of these terms is wholly laid aside.¹ The eminent antiquary who makes this remark probably saw an importance in it; and as it bears in some manner on the constitutional history of the realm, it may not be improper to remark that we do, in fact, find the term baronibus used in the ninth and tenth years of King John, but perhaps not later, as may be seen on reference to the present volume at the 76th, the 77th, and other pages.

The King himself sometimes present.

The King was often himself present. When that was the case the expression "coram ipso domino Rege" is used; and that this was a real presence, and not a fictitious presence by a deputy, appears from this circumstance,—that when we find that the court was at York, or at any other place at which the King is said to be present, we know by the independent evidence of chronicles, and the testes of royal writs entered on the Patent and Close Rolls, that the King was actually present at those places on the days on which the Fines were levied. King John was much abroad in the early years of his reign, but he was also much in England; and, yet, it is not till the sixth of his reign that we find him sitting in person in his court. He sat very frequently from that year till the fifteenth, when in England. Spelman has printed a Fine which was levied at Clarendon in the thirty-third of Henry II. before the King in person and John his son¹; and Dugdale refers to a Fine, which he perused among the historical collections made by Glover the Somerset Herald, which was levied in the King's court at Winchester "coram ipso domino Rege" in the fifth year of King Richard I.²

The King's Court in which Fines are now levied is that of the Common Pleas. It was not, it is believed, till after the period at which the Fines in this work were levied, that the business of the Common Pleas was severed from that of the King's Court in general.

tains the names of the parties between whom the supposed suit takes place, and a specification of the lands, advowsons, rents, or other matters which are the subject of the transfer. The parties are called the Petentes and Tenentes, and sometimes, the Querentes and Deforciantes. In the early Fines these terms rarely occur. Sometimes they appear by a representative, and this is generally the case with the religious communities, who proceed by the act of one of their own body, who is, as the expression is, "positum loco suo ad lucrandum vel perdendum." The description of the premises is generally short, the name of the township or manor in which the lands are situated being held a sufficient description, as “a hide of land in Wantage,” “three messuages with their appurtenances in Cambridge,” and it is rather in the latter part of the Fine, when the reservations are spoken of, that we have any minute particulars concerning the lands. But in many of the Fines there are particular facts or circumstances set forth when the lands are first mentioned, and these are sometimes of an interesting character.

III. The plea and the concession made by one of the parties. The form is often no more than this: “Unde placitum fuit inter eos in prefata curia,” but not unfrequently the supposed action proceeds upon some special plea, as the “placitum warrantie cartæ,” or recognition, as “Unde recognitio magnæ assisæ summonita fuit inter eos” — “Unde recognitio de morte antecessoris summonita fuit inter eos;” and in respect of ecclesiastical rights, “Unde recognitio ultimæ presentationis summonita fuit inter eos,” and sometimes, still more specially, the enquiry was who presented the last clerk to the Church in the time of peace. In a few instances it is, “Unde duellum vadiatum et armatum fuit,” or “Unde duellum vadiatum et armatum et percussum fuit.” Besides these I have not observed in the Fines of these reigns any other forms, except when in a few instances there was a special point on which the judgment of the court was supposed to be taken, as whether certain lands were a lay fee, or held in pure and perpetual alms, and the like. — After stating that issue had been joined, the judgment or declaration follows, in which the lands or other possessions are declared to belong to the party to whom the conveyance was intended to be made.

IV. In the fourth and last division, we have Fourth portion. the consideration given by the other party for the matter which is conveyed, or the service by which it was to be held, with accounts of the reservations made by the party making the grant. Sometimes in this clause of the Fine we find lands granted by the party who had taken the lands specified in the body of the Fine, so as to give to the transaction the character of an exchange.

The name of the county in which the lands lie does not occur in the body of the Fine, but is subscribed at the foot. This word must be taken as part of the Fine, as the only authoritative declaration of the particular place intended, when, as is often the case, we have many places in different parts of the kingdom having the same designation. The names of the counties are in almost every instance written by the same hand, and at the same time with the body of the Fine. When no name of any county is added by the early scribe, the name of a county has been written upon a Fine by a hand which appears to be of the beginning of the last century, and as the appropriation has not always been successfully performed, the name of the county is retained in this publication only in the case in which it is written in a hand contemporary with the Fine itself. From the preceding account of the nature of these instruments, it is manifest that we obtain through them many particulars concerning the men in whom the great interests in the country were vested, and concerning those interests themselves, whether manors, advowsons, or mere estates in land, of great importance to two classes of historical enquirers ; (1.) Those who are engaged in investigating the gentilitial antiquities of the English nation, and the origin and progress of those great families who appear prominent in English history ; and (2.) Those who are engaged in the kindred labour of topographical research, and endeavouring to ascertain what have been the fortunes and the changes of those inheritances first created by the Conqueror, or by those who were enfeuded by him ; or, in the perhaps more interesting enquiry, to whom it is that we owe the churches with which England was richly set in the times over which so much obscurity rests, the pride and ornament, the blessing and surest protection of our country. It will be no matter of surprise to any one who knows that evidence such as this publication contains, (on which alone enquiries such as these can be conducted to a successful issue,) has been inaccessible till now, that we have so many long periods of utter darkness in the line of families who were undoubtedly in their day of eminent note, and in the history of considerable feudal superiorities, and of ecclesiastical foundations. When the difficulty, not to say the utter impossibility of access to the documents which contain the facts wanted, often important in themselves, and still more important when combined with other facts, is fully considered, we shall not be surprised that in works of the nature alluded to, so much that might be known is left untold, and that we have probability and conjecture, where if the evidence could have been had, there would have been decision and certainty. I am one of those who have been engaged in these researches, and who have contributed something to that great but undigested heap out of which one day will arise a magnificent BARONAGE, and a magnificent BRITANNIA, both worthy of the name, and can bring the testimony of experience to the inconvenience which is felt in such enquiries, through the want of that contemporary and authoritative evidence which this publication, and other publications, issued under the sanction of the Commission, now supplies: and I venture to add that the gratitude of all such enquirers, and of all who delight in the results of such enquiries, or who are in any way benefited by them, will rest on those who established a Commission for this great purpose, on the members of the Commission itself, and not least on their vigilant, enlightened, and zealous secretary.

All labour of this kind prospective to a future BARONAGE and BRITANNIA.

Whoever looks in this work for facts, which, singly considered, are of a very striking character, will assuredly be disappointed. The subject of it is the exchange of property, the passing of manors, advowsons, and lands from hand to hand, the chief changes, in short, in respect of the possession of these things in the reigns of Facts singly considered striking, not to be expected.

The value of these documents rather from the multitude of minute pieces of information.

Richard I. and John. This from its very nature does not present single points on which the mind can rest, and discern in them matter of high importance. It is in the multitude of these facts, in the notices which the Fines contain of innumerable persons, perhaps only to be found here, in whom possessions of manors or churches inhered in those early times; in the notices of partitions of estates among coheirs, with the marriages of those coheirs; in the mention of the wives — a species of information which is almost peculiar to the Fine; in the innumerable local terms which occur in them; in the notices which they not unfrequently contain of dependencies and connections between contiguous properties, important perhaps in the adjustment of rights even in the present day; in the mention which they contain of the course of the antient roads of the kingdom, as, in the present volume, the Ikneild Street is more than once mentioned; in the notices which they contain of peculiar services, peculiar customs, and the habits of a state of society which has long passed away; in the view which they present of the progressive accumulation of property in the hands of the religious, and the frequent mention which they make of the superiors of the communities of religious, of whom a catalogue almost complete might be made from this species of document alone — it is these things, which singly are perhaps of no great moment, which give the value to the species of document of which this publication consists. We may add, that each Fine is also the basis, the secure and venerable foundation, on which some interest of the present day may be resting.

The Fine of which the fac-simile and the reading have been given was selected without much search for one which should contain valuable information above its fellows. We find in it, however, evidence of two generations in the house of Braybroc, one of the baronial houses of the realm; and though it does not show that Henry the son married the heiress of the Wischard Leydet and Margery his wife, who are here mentioned, yet it does show that connection between the two families which might well issue in such a marriage, which Dugdale shows to have actually taken place¹ on the evidence of the Fine Roll of the 6 Hen. III., a species of document alike in name, but entirely differing in its character from the documents of which this work consists. Respecting the manor of Sutton in Bedfordshire, which is the subject of the Fine, it shows us that at the time when the Fine was passed the advowson of the church was regardant to the manor, whence there is an inference to be drawn, but little removed from certainty, that the inhabitants of Sutton owed the foundation of their church to the persons of whom Wischard and Margery were the representatives. Braybroc was to hold Sutton not of the heirs of Wischard but of Margery, whence it would be the part of the topographer to search for the precedent history of Sutton not in the line of Leydet, but in the line of Margery the wife, who is shown by Dugdale to have been an heir of one branch of the family of Foliot.¹ The father of Margery would place such an enquirer within a generation of the date of Domesday Book. Further, it is declared that Stratton and Hulme were members of the manor of Sutton, but that they are now disjoined from it, at least that while the manor and advowson of Sutton pass to the elder Braibroc, the services of the freemen of Stratton and Hulme remain to the Leydets. Whether this may afford any material elucidation of the present distribution of that part of the county of Bedford there are no public means of knowing, Bedfordshire being one of the counties to which the investigations of topography have been but partially applied; but there are many cases in the topography of England in which such a piece of information, slight as it may appear, would be found to clear away much obscurity and to reconcile later appearances to the description given of a tract in the ever-faithful pages of Domesday Book. That Braibroc had to pay money to certain Jews in discharge of a debt which Wischard and Margery Leydet had contracted, for which the manor of Sutton was assigned to him, is illustrative of the manners of the age, of the personal character of the then head of the house of Leydet, and is probably a new fact in the history of Sutton.

Instances are rare of persons in the rank immediately below the sovereign, in those early times, availing themselves of this mode of transferring property; and it is not till the reign of Henry III. that we find the King himself in the condition of petent or tenent. Dugdale had perused Fines in which that King and others in which King Edward I. and King Edward IV. were parties.¹

The King sometimes a party.

It has been made a question, what may be passed by Fine? In times comparatively recent, it is said that a fine was levied of the dignity of Baron. This was done about the period when Cowell had promulgated his opinion, that any thing inheritable may thus be passed, "being in esse tempore finis." In the present volume there is only one Fine, the subject of which can be regarded as an exception to the general rule, that not dignities or offices, but the more substantial possessions are those for the transferring of which recourse was had to this mode. The only exception is the Fine at page 118, in which Andrew of the Exchequer surrenders to Hugh, the Abbot of Abingdon, the office of keeper of the gates of the monastery, the Abbot covenanting, nevertheless, that he shall continue to enjoy it for life, and that it shall be enjoyed in succession by his sons, Thomas, Roger, and John.

What may be transferred by Fine.

¹ One of the most remarkable names among the deforciant of the Fines is to be found in a Fine, transcribed on account of this singularity both in the Hale and the Maynard Manuscripts, in the library of the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn. It was levied at Westminster "a die Sancti Martini in xv. dies 1 Henrici IV." The plaintiff was Thomas de Rempston, and the deforciant "Ricardus nuper Rex Angliæ chivaler." The parcels were the manors of Bingham and Clopton o' th' Hill juxta Plumtree, in the county of Nottingham, with the advowson of the church of Bingham, which the deposed King recognized to be the right of the said Thomas, for which he gave the King fifty marks of silver.

Constitutional information afforded by them.

While the body of direct information which these documents contain will be regarded as a valuable addition to the materials which are provided for the use of those who are engaged in the critical investigation of the minuter sections of the history of the country and its more illustrious inhabitants, yet there are many who will regard the information which is collateral or incidental as of, perhaps, superior value. Whatever tends to illustrate the form of the Constitution, and to present us with facts respecting some of the most important of our national institutions, in a period when the nature of the Constitution is "not to be collected from any direct information which has come down to us, but rather from observing what was the practice in particular points, and thence, if possible, deducing the principle¹," will be regarded by many persons as possessing a still higher value. Reverting, then, again to the subject which was reserved, when speaking of the first of the four great sections of these documents, we may observe that we may collect from them the best information which is now within our reach concerning the sittings of the Curia Regis for the administration of justice, and concerning the persons, both the classes and the individuals, of whom that court was composed.

The results of an examination of the Fines of the reigns of Richard and John are placed as an Appendix to this Preface.

SITTINGS OF THE CURIA REGIS.

7 Richard I. A.D. 1195-6.

[The reign of Richard began 3d September 1189.]

Usually at Westminster; but there are Fines levied—

1. At Oxford, on the Sunday after the feast of St. Andrew, before Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, Wil. de Warren, Wil. Briwere, and Geffery de Bocland.
2. At Norwich, on the vigil of St. Margaret, and at Cateshill on the Friday after the feast of St. James, before Wil. de Glanville, Osbert Fitz Hervey, and Simon de Patishull.
3. At Worcester, on the Monday after the feast of St. Bartholomew, before the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Hereford, the Archdeacon of Hereford, Geffery Fitz Peter, Wil. Briwere, and Michael Belet.

8 Richard I. A.D. 1196-7.

At Westminster only; except that Roger Le Bigot, Osbert Fitz Hervey, Wil. de Glanville, and Oger Fitz Oger sat at Thetford on the crastinum Clausi Paschæ, or the Monday after the first Sunday after Easter.

9 Richard I. A.D. 1197-8.

At Westminster, with two Iters, viz.:

1. At Bedford, where many Fines of this year were levied before Geffery Fitz Peter and his companions.

2. At Shrewsbury, about the time of the Epiphany, where Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, Roger le Bigot, Geffery Fitz Peter, and Geffery de Bocland sat. An indorsement on one of these Fines shows that they were levied "in itinere Archiepiscopi in Walliam ad deliberand David Regem Walliæ."

10 Richard I. A.D. 1198-9.

Fines are levied at Westminster, Lambeth, Southwark, Bermondsey, Stratford, and Clerkenwell. In this year were the following Iters :—

1. In the West, by Geffery Bishop of Winchester and his companions, who sat at Exeter almost every day from 22d September to 5th. October. In November they sat at Winchester; and in January a portion of what appears to be the same party sat at Wilton.
2. In the Eastern Counties, the Iter of Richard Archdeacon of Ely and his companions, in the months of September, October, and November. This is particularly pointed out as an Iter in an indorsement on a Cambridgeshire Fine, printed vol. i. p. 269. Fines were levied before them at Cambridge, Thetford, and Norwich. We find also the Archdeacon of Ely, attended by Osbert Fitz Hervey and Michael Belet, sitting at Northampton six days before the Purification of the Blessed Mary.
3. In the Midland Counties, the Iter of Geffery Fitz Peter and his companions. An indorsement on one of the Berkshire Fines (vol. i. p. 100.) points out this as an Iter. It was held in January. We find them sitting at Dunstable, at Reading, and at Coventry, where they are expressly called Justiciarii Itinerantes.

1 John, A.D. 1199-1200.

Besides the sittings at Westminster we have three Iters in this year.

1. That which is called on the back of one of the Fines the Iter of Simon de Patishull and his companions, Justices of our Lord the King. We are enabled by the dates of the Fines to trace the progress of the Justices, who at Bartholomew tide, 24th August, were at Oxford, 1st Sept. at Gloucester, 9th Sept. at Hereford, 12th Sept. at Leominster, 14th Sept. at Worcester, before Michaelmas at Shrewsbury, and after it at Lichfield. The Abbot of Tewkesbury, whose name was Alan, sat as a justice on this Iter, and, as it seems, on no other occasion.
 2. In September and October, the Archdeacon of Ely, with other Justices accompanying him, sat at Leicester and Northampton.
 3. About the same time of the year the Bishop of Winchester and other Justices sat at Winchester.
- During the whole of this year the King was abroad.

2 John, A.D. 1200-1.

We have had no reason to suppose that in any former year the court in which the Fines were levied moved with the King, unless the sittings in the 10th of Richard at Lambeth and other places near to Westminster are instances of it. But, we now find that the court followed the King, and Fines are levied at remote and obscure places where, on comparing the Testes of Writs still remaining, we find the King at the time was. The greater part of the Fines of this year were levied at Westminster; but we have some levied at Bolsover on the Thursday next after Mid Lent, where the King was on the 8th of March, and at Windsor and Marlborough about the time of Easter. It is not said of any of these Fines that they were levied before the King in person, but only before his Justices. There were no Iters in this year.

3 John, A.D. 1201-2.

The King went abroad at the very commencement of his third year's reign. Fines were levied in his court at Porchester while on his journey to the coast. The Justices then with the King were Simon de Pateshull, Eustace de Faucunberg, and Ralph de Stoks. Notwithstanding the King's absence the Justices continued to sit at Westminster during the whole of the year.

Two Iters occur in the Fines of this year:—

1. In the West, by Simon de Patishull and others, who sat at Sherburn, Ilchester, Taunton or Tawton, Exeter, and Launceston. This was in the months of June and July.
2. In the Eastern Counties, in the months of July and August, Geffery Fitz Peter appears to have been the chief. They sat at Dunwich, Ipswich, and Norwich.

4 John, A.D. 1202-3.

The King was abroad during the whole of this year; and, although we find that there were Fines levied in the court at Westminster before the Chief Justice and others, yet the greater part of the Fines of this year were levied in the Iters from the months of June to November. Of these there were the following:—

1. The Iter of Geffery Fitz Peter, Earl of Essex, the Chief Justice himself, who was attended by Richard de Heriard, Osbert Fitz Hervey, Jordan de Turribus, James de Potterne, and Ralph de Stoks, who sat at Reading in July, at Winchester in August, and at Chichester in September.
2. The Iter of Simon de Patishull, who was attended by Eustace de Faucunberg, Richard de Malebisse, Henry de Northampton, and Alexander de Pointon. They sat at Lincoln in June, at Leicester in July, at Coventry in August, at Northampton in the latter part of August and in September, at Bedford in September, and at Dunstable in October.
3. The Iter of Godfrey de Insula in the Eastern Counties. His companions were Reginald de Cornhill, Walter de Crepping, and Reginald de Argenton. We find them sitting at Cambridge on 17th June and 25th June, at Norwich on 6th July, at Linne on 23d and 27th July, at Ipswich on 1st August, at Hertford on 15th September, and at Chelmsford on 28th September.

4. The Iter of John Bishop of Norwich in the North. His companions were Roger Arundel, Hugh Bardolf, John de Gestling, Hugh de Bobi, and William Fitz Richard. They sat at Nottingham at the end of June, at Doncaster in July, at York, Newcastle, and Carlisle in September, at Appleby in October, at Lancaster in the latter part of October, and at Richmond in November.

We have in this a nearer approach than we have yet seen to the Circuits and Iters of later times. We seem indeed to have the Home, the Midland, the Eastern, and the Northern Circuit; while the persons named are all lawyers by profession, who are found composing the court when it was held at Westminster.

Beside the Iters, there were sittings of the Justices at the Old Temple in London, and also at Bermondsey, which might be on an Iter for the county of Surrey.

5 John, A.D. 1203-4.

Before the King's return there are traces of an Iter by Geffery Fitz Peter, who, with other Justices, sat at Northampton in July, and at Leicester in August. We also find that Simon de Patishull and Ralph de Stok sat at Bristol on the Saturday after the Annunciation, when burgages in that city were passed before them.

The King returned at the beginning of December, and very soon proceeded to the northern part of his dominions. Fines were levied in the court which attended him at Nottingham on the octaves of the Purification, and at York on the Saturday after the feast of St. Peter in Cathedra. The King is not said to have been present in person at the levying of these Fines, but we know from other evidence that he was at Nottingham and York at the times mentioned. The Justices who were with him were Geffery Fitz Peter, Hugh de Chaucumb, Ralph de Stok, Eustace de Faucunberg, and Josceline de Wells. We have also Fines levied at Portsmouth on the feast-day of St. John in this year, by which St. John Port Latin is meant, the King being certainly on that day at Portsmouth.

In this year there were no Iters; and now we first find the phrase occurring, as it does, in almost every Fine, coram ipso domino Rege. The inconvenience which must have resulted to suitors from the frequent change of the King's residence may be judged of from this rapid sketch of the movements of the court as they are indicated by the dates of the Fines.

We have Fines at Taunton and Bristol in July, at Worcester in August, at Freemantle in Hampshire (Frigidum Mantellum) in September, at Winchester and Guildford in October. In that month the King sat in person at Westminster, in November at Winchester, in December at Melksham in Wiltshire, where he was on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of that month; in Hilary Term he again sat in person at Westminster. In February Fines were levied at Woodstock, and at Gatingden in Northamptonshire; early in March before the King at York, and before the close of the month at Oxford. In Easter Term he sat in person in the Old Temple, and at St. Bridget's, London.

Fines were levied at Clarendon on the Monday after Mid Lent before Geffery Fitz Peter, Ralph de Stok, and Josceline de Wells, and there is no sufficient evidence that the King was there at the time.

Geffery Fitz Peter, the Earl of Essex and the Chief Justiciar, was with the King at Guildford, Winchester, York, and Oxford, and also when the King sat in person at Westminster or London. The other Justices who were generally with him were Simon de Patishull, James de Potterne, Ralph de Stok, Josceline de Wells; but other persons occur.

7 John, A.D. 1205-6.

There were no Iters in this year or no Fines preserved which were levied at them. All the Fines are in the King's Court, and, for the most part, coram ipso domino Rege. The court was as restless as in the preceding year. We find it, by the light afforded by the dates of the Fines, at Northampton in May, at Porchester in June, at Ongar in August, at Lincoln in October, at Tewkesbury and Worcester in January, at York early in February, and at Lancaster before the end of the month, at Clarendon and Winchester in the middle of April, and at Westminster in the Easter term. In Trinity term there were sittings at St. Bridget's in London, and on the Thursday before the feast-day of St. Bartholomew at Nottingham, at which the King can hardly have been present.

Geffery Fitz Peter and the other Justices named above, with Richard de Mucegros and Eustace de Faucunberg, were generally with the King.

8 John, A.D. 1206-7.

In this year the Iters were resumed, and we have only one instance of Fines when the King was present in person, namely, at Woodstock in the month of February.

Three distinct Iters may be traced :—

1. One in which William de Wrotham Archdeacon of Taunton was the chief. His companions were Reginald de Cornhill, John de Gestling, and Roger de Huntingfeld. They are expressly called Justices Itinerant, whenever named. They sat at St. Bridget's, London, in July, at Stratford on 9th August, at Colchester on 23d August, at Canterbury in September, and at Westminster in the quindenens of St. Michael.
2. An Iter in the Eastern Counties, including Bedfordshire and Lincolnshire. Simon de Patishull was the chief. He was accompanied by the Archdeacon of Sarum and Richard de Seing. They sat at Bedford, Cambridge, St. Edmundsbury, Norwich, and Lincoln, in the months of August and September.
3. In the Northern Counties was an Iter in the months of July, August, and September. Robert de Vipont's name stands first. With him were Eustace de Faucunberg, Roger Arundel, William de Perci, and Walter de Bovington. Fines were levied before them at York, Newcastle, Appleby, and Lancaster.

9 John, A.D. 1207-8.

The Fines of this year appear to have all been levied in the places where the King chanced to be at the time, and most of them before himself in person. We find them in July at Winchester, in August at Feckenham in Worcestershire, in September at Cranbourn, in the octaves of St. Michael at Westminster, in Michaelmas term at Northampton, in the octaves of St. Martin at Hereford, about the feast of St. Andrew at Marlborough, in Hilary term at Northampton, on the octaves of the Purification at Westminster, and on the quindenies at St. Bridget's, London, at Clarendon on the Sunday after Mid Lent, at Northampton again after Easter, as also at Hereford and Woodstock, and again at Westminster in the Easter term. The Justices most commonly with the King were Patishull and Potterne, Mucegros, Henry de Pont-Audemer, Ralph de Arderne, and Humphrey Archdeacon of Sarum.

10 John, A.D. 1208-9.

The Fines of this year are nearly equally divided between those which were levied in the ever-moving court of the King, and those which were levied in three Iters which may be distinctly traced in the record.

In respect of the Fines of the first class, we find them levied at Westminster very soon after Ascension Day, at Winchester, Tewkesbury, and Worcester in June, in July at Windsor, Finmore, Northampton, and Rockingham, at Carlisle on the 15th of August, on the 1st of September at Nottingham, and in December at Leicester. In February the King was at Reading, and between Easter and the next Ascension Day we have Fines levied before him at Doncaster, York, Knaresborough, and Durham, whence he returned southward, and we find him at Pontefract, Derby, Hareston in Leicestershire, and Lichfield.

Patishull, Potterne, Pont-Audemer, and the Archdeacon of Hereford were almost constantly with the King in these journies. The Archdeacon of Stafford, Eustace de Faucunberg, Mucegros, Crepping, and Anderne, are often found with him.

The Iters were—

1. One for the Northern Counties, the Justices being Adam de Port, Simon de Patishull, Godfrey de Insula, &c. They sat at Doncaster on the morrow of the octaves of St. Michael, from whence they removed to York, and thence to Newcastle, Carlisle, and Appleby, finishing their Iter at Lancaster.
2. Another including Coventry, Lichfield, Shrewsbury, Leicester, and Derby, in the autumn. The name of Ralph de Arderne generally stands first in the Fines levied in this Iter.
3. The Justices employed in the two Iters above are not expressly called Justices Itinerant; but a third party are called Justiciarii Itinerantes whenever named. This party consisted of Gerard de Camville, William de Huntingfield, Eustace de Faucunberg, James de Potterne, Walter de Crepping, Robert de Aumari, and William de Furneaux. They sat at Westminster in Michaelmas term, at Lincoln and Cambridge in October and November, in Hilary term at Norwich, at St. Edmundsbury at the Clausum Paschæ, and at Linne on the eve, day, and morrow of the Ascension.

11 John, A. D. 1209-10.

The last of the Iters of the preceding year was continued in the present, and the Justices sat at Cambridge on the Tuesday and the Friday after the Ascension. With this exception we have no Fines of this year levied during any Iter, but all in the court actually with the King, and generally before the King in person.

On 28th May at Knap in Sussex, where, with the King, were Hugh de Wells the Elect of Lincoln, Walter de Gray his Chancellor, Geffery Fitz Peter, Wil. Briwere, and Henry de Pont-Audemer. In June he was at Lewes and Westminster; in July at Gillingham, Wareham, Tewkesbury, and Kenilworth; in August at Northampton, and there also soon after Michaelmas, as well as at Canterbury, St. Alban's, Waltham, and Havering; in November at Woodstock, Gloucester, Tewkesbury, and Nottingham; on 1st December at Lichfield. In January the King sat in person at Westminster, St. Bridget's, and the Tower; he was soon after in Wiltshire and Hampshire, whence he returned to Westminster, where he sat in Easter term, and was at Derby on the 6th day of May.

The Justices who sat with him were Patishull, Potterne, Pont-Audemer, Faucunberg, Mucegros, and Huscarl, and sometimes, though rarely, Aumari and Crepping.

12 John, A.D. 1210-11.

All the Fines of this year were levied coram ipso domino Rege, and the Justices who attended the King were Patishull, Potterne, Pont-Audemer, Huscarl, and Aumari. He was at Nottingham in November, at Northampton in the Michaelmas and Easter terms, at York in December, at Dorchester in February, at Westminster and London in Michaelmas, Hilary, and Easter terms. He seems also to have visited the Eastern Counties.

13 John, A.D. 1211-12.

Neither Iters nor permanent sittings at Westminster can be traced in this year. All the Fines of this year, which are very few, were levied before the King in person, who was at Chester immediately after Ascension Day, at Northampton in August, in Michaelmas term at Westminster, in November at Reading, in the winter months at Hereford, York, and Newcastle; on the morrow of the Purification he was at Southampton, in London at Mid Lent, and after Easter at Westminster, Clarendon, and Wilton.

The Justices who attended the King were the same with those of the preceding year. In the instance of one solitary Fine only do we find other Justices named; this is a Fine levied at Northampton, on the day of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, before the King, and Saher Earl of Winchester, Wil. Briwere, and Simon de Patishull.

14 John, A.D. 1212-13.

Geffery Fitz Peter, the Chief Justice, sat at Westminster in the winter of this year, accompanied by Richard de Marisco, William Briwere, Patishull, Potterne, and Huscarl. The King also sat in person on the morrow of the Ascension, and in Trinity, Michaelmas, and Hilary terms. In Trinity term he also sat at Odiham and Winchester, and in the autumn at Durham, York, Knaresborough, Doncaster, Nottingham, Northampton, Abingdon, Reading, Wilton, and Ludgershall. The Justices Patishull, Potterne, Pont-Audemer, and Huscarl were with him. Very few Fines were levied.

15 John, A.D. 1213-14.

Fines of this year are found acknowledged before the King in person at Westminster in Michaelmas and Hilary terms; also at Reading on the morrow of St. Nicholas, and at Oxford on the morrow of All Saints. The Justices who sat with him were Patishull, Potterne, and Huscarl.

There were also sittings at Westminster at the beginning of the 15th year of John, and in Michaelmas and Easter terms, of Geffery Fitz Peter, the Bishop of Winchester, the Earl of Winchester, with others, or of some of them.

16 John, A.D. 1214-15.

The few Fines which exist of this year were levied in Trinity term at Westminster before the Bishop of Winchester, Patishull, Huscarl, and Josceline de Stivecle.

The disturbed state of the kingdom from this period to the end of the reign of John, who died on 19th October 1216, may account for the want of any Fines of this reign later than those levied in June 1214.

II.

NAMES OF PERSONS BEFORE WHOM
FINES WERE LEVIED,From 28 Hen. II. to 15 John.

There is an authority belonging to those documents which still remain on record in the proper depository, which does not belong to transcripts of such documents which are found in the chartularies, or which have been printed (too often but too incorrectly) in the works of former antiquaries. The present work consists only of copies of Fines made immediately from the original record still remaining in its proper custody. In preparing the following catalogue of the distinguished persons who sat in the Curia Regis, I have, however, collected some of the earlier names from a few Fines that have been printed, the originals no longer remaining in the proper place of their deposit.

The brief catalogue of them is subjoined.

- 28 Hen. II. The Court at Westminster, on Saturday the feast of the Apostles Philip and James.—Origines Juridicales, p. 92.
- 30 Hen. II. The Court at Melksham, on the feast of the Conversion of Saint Paul.—Formulare Anglicanum, p. 216.
- 31 Hen. II. The Court at Westminster, on the Friday next after the Ascension.—Id. p. 217.
- 33 Hen. II. The Court at Clarendon.—Spelmanni Archæologus, voce Finis.
- 5 Ric. I. The Court at Westminster, on Thursday the octaves of St. Martin.—Formulare Anglicanum, p. 182.

5 Ric. I. The Court at Winchester, on 21st April.—Historical Antiquities, by Sir Peter Leycester, p. 268.

* This Fine has long had a place in the bundle of Bedfordshire Fines, but there is strong reason to doubt whether it relate to lands in that county; and the subscription which assigns it to that county has been written not much more than a century ago. The other subscriptions are all in a hand contemporary with the body of the Fine, with the exception of the three which stand first in this reign.
